The Little Frog Who Learned to Love Himself

Author's Name

Author's Name

There once was a small frog named Freddie who lived in a pond with his family and friends.

Freddie spent most of his days swimming and playing with his friends, but he often wished he could be big like other frogs.

One day, Freddie
stumbled upon a magical fairy who noticed his sadness.

The fairy asked what was wrong, and Freddie shared his desire to be bigger; the fairy smiled and said,
"True happiness comes from within."

Freddie excitedly made his wish, and in an instant, he grew bigger than all his friends, feeling very proud.

However, as time passed, Freddie realized that being big also came with its own challenges, like not fitting in his favorite hiding spot.

He started to miss his old self, and his friends became intimidated by his new size, making Freddie feel very lonely.

One day, Freddie
visited the fairy again, who gently reminded him, "True happiness comes from loving and accepting yourself just the way you are."

With these wise words, Freddie's wish was
undone, and he shrunk
back to his original size, feeling truly happy and accepted by his family and friends.

From that day on,
Freddie learned to love and accept himself just the way he was,
embracing his uniqueness as the key to true happiness.
